1. Have you, or has anyone you know, been cyberbullied?
Yes, I know someone who experienced cyberbullying like my fri. They received hurtful comments and messages online. It made them feel sad and uncomfortable.

2. What were the steps you, or that person, took to stop the incident ? What are the other ways that you think can combat cyberbullying?
The person stopped responding to the hurtful messages and blocked the person who was bullying them. They also told someone they trusted about what happened. I think cyberbullying can be stopped by blocking and reporting the bully, saving evidence, and telling a trusted adult, teacher, or family member. People should also think before posting or commenting something that can hurt others.

3. What did you, or that person, learn from the experience?
The person learned that it is important not to let hurtful words from others control their feelings. They also learned that asking for help is not something to be ashamed of. We should always treat people with respect, both online and in real life.

4. What are your thoughts and realization in today's generation?
In today's generation, social media is a big part of our lives. It can be useful, but it can also be used to hurt others. My realization is that we should be responsible for what we say and post online. We may think that words are just jokes, but they can deeply affect someone. We should use social media to spread kindness, respect, and positivity instead of hate.
